

University dining halls face significant challenges in minimizing food waste due to unreliable meal demand forecasting, which not only results in financial inefficiencies through overproduction but also exacerbates environmental sustainability concerns by contributing to the university's overall carbon footprint, creating an urgent need for a data-driven solution that optimizes meal preparation based on real-time consumption patterns and predictive analytics.

